

The British Museum

The British Museum was built in 1753. The British Museum is the biggest museum in Britain and one of the biggest and most visited in the world. There are lots of different objects from the ancient times and what we have today.

This is the Rosetta stone. It is only a small object compared to most of the other objects but this one is very important. There are two different languages (Egyptian and Greek) but three different scripts (hieroglyphic, demotic and Greek) that the Ancient Egyptians used and it tells us about someone's lifetime.

The British Museum is building theatres for schools or the public to come in to listen to a member of staff talk about history. They even have famous people like Cleopatra in her coffin.

All objects are protected by either glass or an alarm.
